NON-TECHNICAL SUMMARY

This report presents the results of an archaeological scoping study of 423 sites that are being considered for potential allocation for development or mineral extraction as part of the Doncaster Local Plan. The objective of the archaeology scoping study was to establish the cultural heritage of the sites, thereby contributing to the evidence base of Doncaster Metropolitan Borough Council’s Local Plan. This was achieved by collating existing archaeological, historical, cartographic and aerial photographic information in order to identify the cultural heritage assets within each site and their immediate environs, as well as factors which may have affected the preservation of known and unrecorded heritage assets within the sites. This information allow an assessment to be made of the archaeological potential and significance of each site and their suitability for allocation within the Local Plan. The scoping study also aimed to identify major constraints on allocation, such as the presence of statutorily designated archaeological sites, significant non-designated archaeological sites and important historic landscapes.

In order to provide a rapid visual indicator of the suitability for allocation, each site has been colour-coded according to potential archaeological constraints. Here, the term ‘archaeological’ refers to all cultural heritage assets, including standing buildings, monuments and buried deposits. Where significant differences in the potential for preservation was identified within individual sites, these were split into more than one allocation category. Historic landscape significance has been identified separately to archaeological constraints, to indicate areas where the layout of the fields preserves the pattern of historic land use. This category was adopted to highlight the importance of preserving historic landscape character, and is additional to, and exclusive of, the potential for standing or buried cultural heritage assets.

The archaeology scoping study has identified 22 sites which are considered to have a major archaeological objection to allocation, and 2 sites which fall partially within this category. Three sites have a significant historic landscape objection. There are 79 sites which have no archaeological objection to allocation, with 9 sites partially within this category. Of the 423 sites, 313 are classified as having an uncertain archaeological constraint to allocation, with 8 sites having a partial uncertain designation.
1 INTRODUCTION

This report is an archaeological scoping study of 423 sites that are being considered for potential allocation for development or mineral extraction as part of the Doncaster Local Plan. The scoping study was undertaken to establish any potential archaeological and cultural heritage constraints on the allocation of the proposal sites, to ensure that the historic environment is integrated into planning policy in the Borough, and that planning decisions are based on knowledge of the nature, extent and level of significance of affected heritage assets, as set out in the National Planning Policy Framework (Paragraph 126). The scoping assessment will allow the DMBC to understand the likelihood of substantial harm to, or loss of, heritage assets of archaeological significance as a result of site allocation, and to understand impacts that might reduce the capacity of the sites to accommodate archaeological mitigation.

The archaeological scoping study will contribute to the evidence base for Doncaster’s Local Plan, and ensure that its development targets are based on an understanding of the local archaeological resource. The scoping study establishes the known or expected archaeological potential and potential historic landscape significance of the sites proposed for allocation for future development and reviews the recommendations for sites previously assessed in 2013, in the light of new and recently-available data.

2 GEOLOGICAL AND ARCHAEOLOGICAL BACKGROUND

2.1 Location, topography and geology

In terms of topography and geology, the highest ground lies on the western edge of the borough with the landscape sloping down from west to east across the district. The western edge lies on a ridge of Permian Magnesian Limestone hills, aligned north to south. The limestone is cut by a number of rivers, including the Went, Don and Torne, which have left deep valleys or gorges. These and other smaller rivers meander across the flatter land to the east. Superficial geology is much more extensive on the flatter land, overlying Permian and Triassic sandstones and mudstones of the Sherwood Sandstone and Mercia Mudstone groups.

The superficial deposits that overlie much of the eastern half of the Doncaster District date to the Quaternary Period and include Pleistocene glacial and interglacial deposits of till, boulder clay, sand and gravel. These deposits were created through the advance and retreat of ice sheets, the development of river valleys, and the growth and decline of the ice-dammed Lake Humber in the late Ice Age and early post-glacial periods. In the Doncaster Metropolitan Borough area, an extensive wetland developed over the eastern side of the district in the post-glacial period, originating around 7000 years ago (Gaunt 1994), as a result of a combination of factors including increased rainfall and the waterlogged and poorly drained conditions in the basin of the former Lake Humber. This wetland area contains extensive peat deposits at Thorne.
2.2 Archaeological background

The historic development of the landscape of Doncaster Metropolitan Borough has had a significant impact on the character and preservation of cultural heritage in the district. The following brief summary identifies the broad character of the archaeological remains in the district.

2.2.1 Palaeolithic

Recorded evidence for the Palaeolithic period in Doncaster is limited, but internationally significant Palaeolithic remains are present at Creswell Crags, just to the south of the area. The caves at Creswell are located in a Magnesian Limestone gorge landscape similar to those within the borough, some of which are known to contain caves, fissures and rock shelters and can be expected to contain significant Palaeolithic archaeology and Pleistocene fauna. To the east of the Magnesian Limestone area, Palaeolithic flints and Pleistocene fauna have been recovered from glacial and river gravels and sands, including Lower to Upper Palaeolithic remains such as an Acheulian hand axe, and Mousterian and Aurignacian flints recovered from a gravel pit at Rossington (Wymer 1999). Further east, the former Lake Humber would have limited the potential for Upper Palaeolithic activity, although exploitation of the lake shore environment may well have been significant during this period.

2.2.2 Mesolithic

Mesolithic remains are known from across Doncaster Metropolitan Borough. Many are from flint scatters and isolated finds, with more extensive assemblages recovered from the Don Gorge, Hatfield Moor and Sutton Common. The caves and rock shelters on the western side of the borough continued to be used. The greatest landscape change during the Mesolithic was on the east side of the district, where a large new wetland landscape was created as Lake Humber silted up. This would have been a valuable resource open to exploitation (Van de Noort and Ellis 1997). In addition, the rivers that formerly flowed into Lake Humber, the Went, Don and Torne, now cut new paths across the former lake bed, eroding lake bed sediments and depositing new river-borne alluvial deposits. These river valleys would have created access routes into the new wetland landscape that are likely to have been exploited.

2.2.3 Neolithic to Bronze Age

Evidence for human activity during the Neolithic to Bronze Age periods is often more substantial than in preceding periods. This is due to the development of agriculture, permanent settlements and greater population densities, and the development of monumental sites often related to burial and ritual. The majority of the evidence for these periods within Doncaster Metropolitan Borough are burial sites and artefact scatters but the waterlogged remains of a trackway have been identified on Hatfield Moors, whilst excavations at Sutton Common have shown that this site served a monumental function in the Bronze Age (Van de Noort et al. 2007). Sand and gravel ‘islands’ in wetland areas in the eastern side of the borough have been foci for settlement from the Neolithic to the Iron Age. The development of field systems in the later Bronze Age period has been identified in southern Britain and in some upland areas in the north, but there is currently no evidence for such landscape organisation in the Doncaster district, despite extensive excavation of field remains in recent years.

2.2.4 Iron Age to Roman

There is extensive evidence for Iron Age activity in Doncaster Metropolitan Borough, mainly settlement and field system remains. This evidence ranges from the nationally significant marsh fort at Sutton Common, to widespread settlement remains, of small farmsteads set amongst extensive systems of linear and ‘brickwork-pattern’ fields. Where dated, many of these field systems appear to have originated during the Iron Age. They have been mapped through aerial photography across the area, particularly on the Sherwood Sandstone (Riley 1980) and the Magnesian Limestone (Roberts, Deegan and Berg 2010).

Roman-period remains are very extensive across the Doncaster district, including the major fort of Doncaster itself and several smaller forts. The density of military remains is partly due to the River Don, which formed the boundary of Roman Britain for a short time in the late 1st century AD. Roman towns and industry developed, often around the forts, as at Doncaster where a major pottery industry developed exploiting local clays. Rural settlement and agriculture also expanded, with two known villas and three possible villas known from the Doncaster district (P Robinson pers. comm.). In addition, the existing rectilinear field systems were intensified and extended. There are several enclosed sites associated with this period including earthworks in Edlington Wood, Wadworth Wood and Pot Ridings Wood. The transport infrastructure was improved during the Roman period with new roads being constructed; part of the road to Castleford and York survives as an earthwork at Adwick-le-Street, north of Doncaster. The Romans also undertook the first attempts to drain parts of the wetlands of Thorne and Hatfield Moors and to control the River Don, and are likely to have cut the initial phase of the Turnbridge Dike, which takes some of the water from the River Don north to the River Aire (Dinnin 1997).

2.2.5 Medieval

During the early medieval period there is a concentration of evidence for Anglo Saxon settlement in the regions of Edlington/Conisbrough, Mexborough, Rossington Bridge and Adwick le Street. In 2007, the remains of 37 Anglo-Saxon burials, dating from the 7th-8th centuries, were recorded on the site of the new Outwood Academy at Adwick-le-Street; this is the first certainly Anglo-Saxon cemetery found in South Yorkshire.

Towns developed through the medieval period, with Doncaster itself becoming a major centre. River transport was important during this period with significant ports at Doncaster, Bawtry and Thorne, the latter also having a boat-building industry which may have originated in the medieval period. The river trade would have led to riverside development of wharfs and warehouses and would also have been the focus for other crafts and early industry. Small villages and manors were spread across the district, although settlement density was probably low in the eastern wetland areas. Rural land use changed in some areas, with the development of deer parks and monastic landholdings. Pottery production continued in Doncaster and a pottery industry also developed at Firsby near Conisbrough.
2.2.6 Post-medieval to modern

During the post-medieval and modern periods, the industrialisation of Britain was mirrored at the local level in the Doncaster district, with the growth of urban centres and development of industry. In rural areas, land ownership and agricultural practice changed as the dissolution of the monasteries, enclosure and the agricultural revolution ended the medieval agricultural system. The development of the country house and changing fashion in garden design led to the development of extensive parks and gardens around some houses. These parks and gardens were key to the setting and context of such houses as Hickleton Hall, Cusworth Hall (Grade II Registered Parks and Gardens) and Brodsworth Hall (Grade II* Registered Park and Garden).

In the early to mid-17th century there were concerted efforts to drain large areas of the wetland east of Doncaster and the key figure in this, the Dutch engineer, Cornelius Vermuyden, also moved the River Don. The former course of the Don ran east from Doncaster, passing between Thorne and Hatfield Moors before heading northeast to join the Trent. Vermuyden turned the full flow of the river north up the Turnbridge Dike, which he likely modified, and then cut a new channel, the Dutch River, which runs east from Snaith to the River Ouse. The old course of the River Don was abandoned and was either filled in or silted up naturally. A significant aspect of this engineering of the Don is that the course of the Old River Don was not subject to industrial development along its banks. This means that archaeological deposits and structures from earlier periods that may have been located along the course of the Old River Don have the potential to survive in good condition with little later disturbance. In addition, the works that were undertaken to manage and re-route the river were major undertakings that will have left an imprint on the landscape and could themselves form significant features in the historic environment.

River transport continued to be important in the post-medieval period and canals were also dug to improve the water transport network. Later in the 19th century, railways replaced rivers as the main transport arteries and Doncaster developed into a major railway centre. The construction of the railways is likely to have stimulated the development of the aggregates industry. Within Doncaster there is documentary evidence for localised gravel extraction in the town during the post-medieval period (P Robinson pers. comm.) and recent archaeological excavations in Doncaster by ArchHeritage have identified such features (Bell 2011).

Coal mining developed late in the Doncaster district due to the depth at which the coal lies. Shafts were not sunk until the earliest 20th century and all the major collieries had shafts over 600m deep (Gaunt 1994). New settlements were constructed for these collieries as, for example, at New Edlington, New Rossington, Woodlands and Adwick-le-Street, some designed as model villages utilising ‘garden village’ principles. Surviving features from this late phase of industrial development may now be considered features of historic environment significance.
3 METHODOLOGY

3.1 Aims
The objective of the archaeology scoping study was to establish the cultural heritage of the 423 sites, thereby contributing to the evidence base of Doncaster Metropolitan Borough Council’s Local Plan. This was achieved by collating existing archaeological, historical, cartographic and aerial photographic information relating to the 423 sites in order to identify the cultural heritage assets within each site and their immediate environs, as well as factors which may have affected the preservation of known and unrecorded heritage assets within the sites. This information allow an assessment to be made of the archaeological potential and significance of each site and their suitability for allocation within the Local Plan. The scoping study also aimed to identify major constraints on allocation, such as the presence of statutorily designated archaeological sites, significant non-designated archaeological sites and important historic landscapes.

3.2 Data collection
To achieve the project objectives, readily available baseline data on the cultural heritage resource was collated for all the sites. This was used to rapidly assess the potential for survival of buried archaeological remains, the presence of standing structures and earthworks, and the historic landscape character of all the proposal sites, as well as the proximity of designated or other significant heritage assets whose setting may be impacted by development. The significance of the sites was assigned on the basis of expert knowledge of local, regional and national cultural heritage significance and research frameworks. This information allowed potential archaeological objections to development to be assigned.

The scoping study characterises the heritage resource for the proposed development sites and involved consultation with the client and the South Yorkshire Archaeology Service. The recorded heritage assets, historic environment data and development history were collated for each site, utilising a buffer zone with a radius of approximately 250m around the site’s boundary.

Information used to assess the cultural heritage resource and potential for survival of buried archaeological remains was collected from the following sources:

- South Yorkshire Sites and Monuments Record (SMR);
- South Yorkshire Historic Environment Characterisation (HEC);
- Historic and modern Ordnance Survey mapping (available online);
- National Heritage List for England (NHLE);
- LiDAR data produced for the Environment Agency (available from data.gov.uk);
- Historic landfill information (available from data.gov.uk);
- Magnesian Limestone Aerial Photographic Mapping Project (Roberts et al 2010);
- Recent aerial photograph/satellite imagery (Google Earth, Bing Maps);
- ArcHeritage library.

All work was undertaken in accordance with Guidance and Standards of the Chartered Institute for Archaeologists (CIfA), Historic England guidance, and with industry best practice.
individual site reports were produced by Rowan May, Laura Strafford, Karen Weston and Chris Atkinson.

3.3 Assessment criteria

3.3.1 Suitability for allocation

In order to provide a rapid visual indicator of the suitability for allocation, each site has been colour-coded according to potential archaeological constraints. Here, the term ‘archaeological’ can include all types of cultural heritage assets, including standing buildings, monuments and buried deposits.

Historic landscape significance has been identified separately to archaeological constraints, to indicate areas where the layout of the fields preserves the pattern of historic land use. This category was adopted to highlight the importance of preserving historic landscape character, and is additional to, and exclusive of, the potential for standing or buried cultural heritage assets. Where major historic landscape significance coincides with major archaeological constraints, the latter is prioritised in the colour-coding.

Red indicates that there is a major archaeological constraint on the allocation of the site.

Purple indicates landscapes of major historic significance identified from the Historic Environment Characterisation data, cartographic information and aerial mapping. This indicates a well-preserved historic landscape, where field boundaries have preserved patterns of medieval to early post-medieval agriculture or designed landscapes. The purple colour coding has been used to identify historic landscape significance on sites that have an uncertain archaeological constraint.

Yellow indicates that there is an uncertain archaeological constraint on the proposed allocation of the site, and that further archaeological assessment and evaluation would be required as part of the planning process, to clarify their suitability for development and the need for mitigation.

Green indicates that there is no known archaeological constraint on the allocation of the site.

Where a site is clearly divided between one or more categories, these have been split on the maps to show areas of mixed suitability. This can be due to partial destruction of cultural heritage assets through quarrying, mining or previous development within only a part of the site, or to features of regional or national significance forming a small part of a larger site where the potential for and significance of heritage assets are unknown.

3.3.2 Archaeological potential

Each site has been allocated a potential level of High, Moderate, Low, Negligible or Unknown depending on the factors described in Table 1, below. Archaeological potential has been assessed on the basis of the current understanding of the cultural heritage assets.

The data gathered will allow the archaeological potential of each site to be assessed. This has been assigned based on a combination of the presence and character of heritage assets recorded within the site or its vicinity and the likelihood that buried remains will survive. The likelihood of survival of remains is based on the extent of known ground disturbance at the site as shown on historic mapping, aerial photographs and from land use data. Sites may contain areas with varying levels of potential and the overall potential of the site will normally be based on that of the most significant asset within the site.

Table 1: Archaeological potential criteria

3.3.3 Archaeological significance criteria

Each site has been allocated a significance level of National, Regional, Local, Negligible or Unknown depending upon the factors described in Table 2, below. Archaeological significance has been assessed on the basis of the current understanding of the cultural heritage assets. In the majority of cases, this does not include detailed desk-based research or other fieldwork. The significance level should therefore be considered provisional, pending further investigation. Sites may contain heritage assets of varying levels of significance and the overall significance of the site will normally be based on that of the most significant asset within the site.

</tbody>

3.3.4 Historic landscape criteria

Each site has been allocated an historic landscape significance level. As the scale of this project has not allowed detailed early historic cartographic research, the historic landscape significance has mainly been based on information in the South Yorkshire Historic Environment Characterisation project (HEC), and on historic OS mapping from the mid-19th century onwards. The significance level should therefore be considered to be provisional, pending further information. For this project, the main aim has been to identify landscapes of Major historic significance; other sites have therefore been categorised as Negligible or Uncertain. This recognises that more detailed documentary and cartographic research may be able to clarify the date and significance of enclosures for sites classed as uncertain. The historic landscape significance is additional to, and exclusive of, the archaeological significance.

</tr>
<tr>
<td>Negligible</td>
<td>Sites where the historic field pattern has been lost through boundary realignment or development.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

3.3.5 Site allocation categories

The identification of archaeological constraints is based on the presence, proximity and significance of recorded heritage assets, including designated and undesignated sites and historic landscapes, and the potential for the survival of unrecorded archaeology at the site. The setting of designated heritage assets or other significant archaeological sites has also been considered in assessing archaeological constraints, based on the proximity of proposed development to the asset and on the surrounding landscape character. The sites have been allocated to one of four categories listed in Table 4, below.

Table 4: Site allocation categories

<thead>
<tr>
<th>Category</th>
<th>Rationale</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Major archaeological objection to allocation</td>
<td>Archaeological remains of national or regional significance are known or highly likely to survive within the site. The setting of a designated or other important cultural heritage asset will be negatively impacted by development within the site.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Significant historic landscape objection to allocation</td>
<td>Development will result in the removal of character elements of a landscape with major historic landscape significance.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Uncertain archaeological objection to allocation</td>
<td>The archaeological potential and significance of the site cannot be assessed on the basis of a rapid scoping and further archaeological assessment and fieldwork will be required.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>No archaeological objection to allocation</td>
<td>It is known that no archaeological remains are present within the site, or previous ground disturbance at the site is expected to have significantly impacted upon any buried archaeology.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Colour-coded GIS polygon shapefiles have been produced to identify which sites fall into each category. For the colour coding, a significant historic landscape objection category is superseded by a major archaeological objection where a site falls into both categories, but outweighs uncertain or negligible archaeological objections. Sites have been split into more than one polygon where a substantial proportion falls into a different category to the remainder of the site.
4 RESULTS

The results of the scoping study are tabulated in Section 6, and are presented as individual site reports in Appendix 1. Each site report contains a map, with the site colour-coded to give a visual indicator of the archaeological constraints on that particular site. Overall maps showing the locations of the parcels and their allocations are given in Figures 2-13.

4.1 Major archaeological constraint on allocation

The site contains, or is close to, known archaeological remains of National or Regional significance, where there has been little or no previous development or disturbance on the site.

4.2 Significant historic landscape constraint on allocation

This category comprises sites where the field boundaries demonstrate a good legibility of historic landscape use, generally originating in the medieval or early post-medieval periods. This is additional to and exclusive of the site’s potential for standing or buried heritage assets.

Three sites are in this category:

4.3 Uncertain archaeological constraint

Sites have been assigned to this category for a number of reasons:

A. The site contains, or is close to, known archaeological remains of National, Regional or Local significance where there has been previous development or disturbance on the site and the likely survival of heritage assets is unknown.

B. The site contains known archaeological remains of Local significance where there has been little or no previous development or disturbance on the site and the likely survival of heritage assets is moderate or high.

C. The site contains no known archaeological remains of National, Regional or Local significance, but there has been little or no previous development or disturbance on the site and the likely survival of any previously unrecorded heritage assets is considered to be moderate or high.

There are too many sites in this category to list individually. In total, 313 sites are of uncertain allocation, with eight sites partially within this category.

Further archaeological assessment and evaluation will be required for these sites. The scope of the assessment and evaluation fieldwork required will need to be discussed and agreed with the South Yorkshire Archaeology Service at an early stage in the development design stage; the results of the evaluation will then need to be submitted as supporting information with the resulting planning application(s).

4.4 No archaeological constraint

There has been significant previous development or disturbance on the site and the potential survival of cultural heritage assets is considered to be Negligible.

There are 79 sites in this category:

The details for each site are presented in individual site summary reports (Appendix 1). The major headings are outlined below.

7.1 Key information
Key information about the site allocation reference number, size, location, etc, was provided by the client in tabular form and as a GIS shapefile.

7.2 Map
A map has been produced overlying all information gathered during the scoping exercise, in point, polyline or polygon format. The 250m buffer zone is also shown. Each site has been colour-coded red, yellow or green, according to its suitability for allocation. Sites with an uncertain archaeological constraint which have major historic landscape significance have been colour-coded purple.

7.3 Summary
Key attributes have been summarised in table form (e.g. number of designated, recorded heritage assets, etc) according to whether they fall within the site itself or the buffer zone.

7.4 Allocation recommendation
This states the archaeological significance of the site and the significance of the historic landscape, based on the available evidence, and the suitability of the site for allocation.

7.5 Site assessment
The free text box contains a summary of information gathered from all data sources. It includes a summary of the recorded heritage assets and archaeological events, historic environment characterisation, recorded cropmark information and an assessment of recent aerial photographs and Lidar data, historic map regression and recorded historic land use data. From this information, an assessment is made of the potential for the survival of earthwork features, structures and buried archaeological deposits within the site, the likely requirement for further archaeological investigation, and an assessment of the significance of identified archaeological remains.
