What is dementia?
Dementia is caused when the brain is damaged by diseases such as Alzheimer’s disease or a series of strokes. Alzheimer’s disease is the most common cause of dementia but there are many other types. Dementia is not a natural part of the ageing process but it is more common in people over the age of 65 and the likelihood of developing dementia does increase with age. However, it can affect younger people too. Dementia affects everyone differently.

The symptoms may include problems with:
• Memory – forgetting names, places, conversations and appointments
• Concentration, planning and organising - difficulties carrying out daily tasks, making decisions or problem solving
• Communication - saying or doing something repetitively, struggling to complete sentences or difficulties following conversations
• Visual perception – difficulties judging distances and seeing objects in three dimensions
• Orientation – becoming confused about where they are and losing track of days and dates

Dementia prevalence
The number of people with dementia in the UK reached 850,000 in 2015 and is expected to reach one million by 2025. It is estimated that just over 3,600 people are currently living with dementia in Doncaster, with 2,750 on GP dementia registers.

Doncaster Dementia Action Alliance has been established by members of our local community to improve the lives of people living with dementia and their carers.
